NAF WEEK 15: HEADLINES

Creeveland Agony As Scramblers Go Top.

It looks like the Creevelnd Crescents will have an agonising end to the season, and it will only partly be due to the broken bones and bruises they sustained after being thrashed by the no-nonsense Vynheim Valkyries this week. For the first time this season the Crescents drop into second place and the Skaven Scramblers fairly-tale season continued, as they stole into first place. Everything now hinges on the final round of games, if the Crescents win and the Scramblers lose, they will take the title, any other permutation will mean the Scramblers win the division.

▲ All-Stars Loss Proves Fatal for the Killers.

After matching the mighty Chaos All-Stars for the past 14 weeks, Khain's Killers lost decisively when the two teams faced each other on the field of play in week 15. The Killers were totally outclassed, as the All-Stars lived up to their name, Morg N'thorg was in devastating form, shutting down the Killers running game on defense and even he managed to generate some rushing paces late in the game. The All-Stars face the Stunted Stoutfellows in week 16, a game that, barring a miracle, is a guaranteed win.

Cowboys clip the Eagles' Wings In a Thriller.

It may have been a much closer contest than earlier in the season, but the result stayed the same, the Darkside Cowboys beat the Elfheim Eagles, leaving the Laurelorn outfit with a mountain to climb if they are to win the AFC West divisional title. Worse still the Dark Renegades moved into a preferential position with their hammering of the Stunted Stoutfellows.

Dark Renegades Are Dark Horses

Like silent assassins, the Dark Renegades have positioned themselves to sensationally take the AFC West divisional title from under the noses of the Westside Werewolves and Elfheim Eagles. The Renegades have a slim points conceded advantage over the Eagles and have an easy fixture against the Bluebay Crammers in the final week. All eyes are now on the Westside Werewolves, should they lose to the Athelorn Avengers, the Renegades will win the division.

Champions Confident of Being Crowned Champions

There was no change at the top of the AFC Northern Division this week as both the Champions of Death and Middenheim Marauders had routine victories over stunty opponents. It means that the tussle for the division is going to go down to the final week of the season. The Champs go head to head with the Albion Wanderers for the second time in three weeks, while the Middenheim Marauders will be facing the Everbold Unicorns in Ulthuan. Both teams have been installed as heavy pre match favourites, meaning the advantage lies with the Champions of Death.

WESTSIDE WEREWOLVES

"Good evening, sports fans, Jim Johnson here. Well, have we got a match-up for you tonight. The Skaven Scramblers versus the Westside Werewolves, and the stakes really couldn't be higher, could they, Bob."

"Absolutely, Ol' buddy. A loss for either team tonight may spell the end of their championship aspirations."

"The Scramblers are currently on an incredible 8 game winning streak, who'd have thought that at the halfway point of the season, eh, Bob!"

"Yup. The Scramblers' Blood Bowl hopes back then were deader than the happy hour at Nagash's Bar and Grill, Jim!"

"This don't look good for the Scramblers, Jim. Just look at them fangs... Yowee!"

"But what's this? Oh, ho, ho!
It's a gadget play, Bob!"

"And the gadget in question is a Frisbee, Jim! Genius!"

...And the Scramblers win an absolute thriller!
Their winning streak continues. Can they go on to win the division now, Bob?

"Jim, if they keep coming up with such underhanded, sneaky, and downright evil trick plays, they won't just win the division, they can go on and win the big one!"

"And what about the Werewolves, Bob. Despite this loss they can still win the AFC West next week.

"Jim, All I'm gonna say is, they badly need some training... obedience training, that is. Because, if they keep getting distracted by rubber bones and bouncing balls, I dread to think what's gonna happen when they take to the field against Treemen? [shudder]"

BAD FOR YOUR ELF

BOTH THE ELFHEIM
EAGLES AND GALADRIETH
GLADIATORS ARE STRUGGLING THIS SEASON.
Sports Illustrated FINDS OUT WHY...

In recent weeks, there has been much consternation amongst the sports fans of Ulthuan and Laurelorn, and it's not because the Albion Wanderers have just unveiled their dazzling new away kit, it's because the two most dominant Elf teams in the NAF, the Galadrieth Gladiators and Elfheim Eagles, have been struggling to assert themselves this season.

All this has been the cause of much rejoicing across Naggaroth, where the three of the NAF's four Dark Elf teams are having excellent campaigns. Nothing pleases the Druchii more than seeing their despised cousins losing ball games, well, nothing except ritual disembowelment and torture, but you get the idea! In the NFC Central, the Darkside Cowboys won their division at a canter, they're also the defending champions and are the red-hot favourites to retain the Blood Bowl trophy. In the AFC, Khain's Killers have surprised everyone in the Eastern Division, their titanic struggle for supremacy with the Chaos All-Stars has been one of their greatest ever seasons. Meanwhile, in the AFC West, the Dark Renegades are still in the hunt for the divisional title, and with the Eagles' erratic form, anything is possible. Even the Naggaroth Nightwings, who stand no chance of winning the AFC Central, may qualify for the Chaos Cup.

the Elven teams' records by a massive margin. This is partly because the Elves eschewed the game for decades whereas the denizens of Naggaroth have been there since the beginning, over a century ago. However, the main reason is due to the fact that the Druchii are temperamentally better suited to a game that is premised on gratuitous violence and bloodshed. In comparison, Elf teams are appalled by all the blood, sweat and tears- not least because, it leaves unsightly stains on their shiny uniforms!

Of course, the Galadrieth Gladiators will argue that their successful running game proves there's more to the Elf teams than 'long bombs and hairspray'. However, there are limits to the Elves capacity to handle the more physical side of the game. These limits have been painfully exposed during this season, thanks to losing their mega star Blitzer Lucien Swift to a serious injury early on in the campaign. Without their nimble captain leading the line and drawing away defenders, the Gladiators' have become bogged down in bloody battles of attrition, this, in turn has led to an eye-watering list of dead and maimed players. Although Swift's return has led to an improvement in form, it's too little too late to salvage their hopes of winning the division.

Whilst the Gladiators like to think they confound the stereotypical image of an Elf team, the same cannot be said for the Elfheim Eagles. The Laurelorn club are renowned for their spectacular passing game, and it's true, Thrower and Captain Valen Swift's ability to throw super accurate long passes to one of their quicksilver Catchers really is miraculous. However, this excellence comes at a price: In training, the Eagles are far more interested in rehearsing their pyrotechnic passing plays than defensive formations and while other teams are practising their blocks and tackles, the Eagles' players are far more likely to be found visiting their favoured hair stylist.

This lack of interest in the unglamorous art of defending has cost the Eagles several winnable games this season. Although their offence has frequently proven to be unstoppable, their defence has a bad habit of buckling under pressure, particularly against the more brutal teams. That said, they can still win the AFC West, which at the moment is a three-way battle between the Eagles, Renegades and Werewolves. If they do manage to qualify for the playoffs, who knows? They've certainly got the offensive fire power to breach even the toughest defences, but whether they can find the defensive steel to supplement their silky ball handling skills remains to be seen.

The Order of the Brown Paper Envelope

NAF referees have a notoriously short life expectancy. They're only ever one bad call away from being hospitalised, and if that bad call goes against a Minotaur, their next big call is likely be to the local mortician. Blag Backhander, the Hobgoblin referee who died this week aged 40, was one of exceptions, lasting an amazing 15 seasons. However, thanks to his biddable nature, it turns out he also died as the richest game official in recorded history!

Backhander had an unmemorable playing career as a reserve Lineman for the Evil Gits. His retirement after only one season had nothing to do with being injured and everything to do with the realisation that he could make far more money from refereeing than he ever could from playing. You see, Backhander was a Hobgoblin, a perfidious breed renowned for their treachery, which meant he was perfectly suited to become, without doubt, the most bribed referee in the history of professional sport.

From the very first game he officiated, Blag showed a preternatural ability to wring the maximum financial reward from blowing his whistle. Amazingly,

LOW EXPECTATIONS

Once Bitten...

With their season tumbling towards 0-16 ignominy the Hobgoblin Team needed to think of a way to salvage some pride. Knowing they stood no chance against their next opponents the Bluchen Berserkers, they looked at other ways they make an impression. After several days of scratching their heads and picking their noses, Div Scumsuck had an answer, they should make an assault on the record for 'Most Players Bitten' at the same time, he deftly avoided grievous bodily harm from irate players.

Corruption, unless you're the Bright Crusaders, is a fact of life in the NAF- So much so, that the referees governing body, 'the RARG', has set official rates for bribery. Backhander's evil genius was to take this formalised system to its obvious conclusion by creating a menu of 'Ref Payment Plans' for teams to choose from. He boasted that there was a plan to suit every pocket: Hard-up teams could choose his 'Budget Bung', which won them the coin toss and two 'false-start' penalties, whereas, at the other end of the scale, his 'Grand Payola' entitled the purchasing team to, 'three professional fouls two blatant fouls, and the ability to call back an opposition touchdown'.

It became a phenomenal success and Blag quickly became fabulously wealthy. He also never seemed to get attacked by the players. His secret was two-fold: Angry players were placated by him offering a discount on their next set of bribes and failing that, Blag could talk his way out of almost any sticky situation, (and on the very rare occasions when both strategies failed, he could sprint as fast a Skaven!)

Many of his fellow officials looked on jealously, wondering how he managed to circumvent the RARG's rules, the answer was Blag had a set up a complex web of bribes and counter bribes amongst the various governing bodies, it ensured his activities were conveniently overlooked, whilst protecting his monopoly as the most bribed official in the league.

In the end, Backhander's greed was his undoing. Whereas in earlier years he always knew where to draw the line, recently he'd become quite reckless, often haggling with players over the price of a foul, or worse, he'd start taking bids midgame for him to change a call.

Sooner or later, it was going to end badly, and so it did, during this week's heated game between the Galadrieth Gladiators and the Gouged Eye. The Eye were already in a foul mood having recently lost their chance to win the AFC Central division, but they were positively apoplectic when, at a crucial moment in the game, Blag decided to send off the Eye's captain Varag Ghoul-Chewer for the spurious crime of 'walking in an unsportsmanlike manner'. It was clear to everyone Blag had been bribed. As Backhander sent off Ghoul-Chewer, he brazenly asked him if he'd like to 'make a counter-bid' to stay on the pitch. Ghoul-Chewer said nothing, instead he demonstrated another type of 'Backhander', using the full force of his spiky fist to smash the referee in the head, killing him instantly.

(Currently held by the Reikland Reavers' Blocker Zug).

All week long they trained intensely with dental floss and mouthwash, so, when game day arrived, they were, quite literally, 'chomping at the bit' to get started. Things began well. The kick-off led to several Berserkers getting bitten by the Hobgob's gnashing teeth. However, things went rapidly downhill, when Scumsuck decided to take a bite out of Bluchen's famously hungry Minotaur Gore Throatgouger. In the end, it was Throatgouger who thought he' broken the 'most players bitten record' until it was pointed out to him, that it doesn't count if the bites are all on the same player!

GAZ ATTACK!

STAR COLUMNIST:
GAZBAG LINCHKER
PUT DOWN THAT CHAINSAW &
LISTEN TO ME!

YOU KNOW SOMETIMES IT'S HARD TO JUST GET MOTIVATED. THE SEASON IS NEARLY FINISHED, AND MY TEAM HAS GOT NOTHING TO REALLY PLAY FOR. WHY AM I STILL HERE? LET'S BE HONEST WITH OURSELVES. IS ANYONE REALLY A REIKLAND FAN, OR A CHAMPIONS OF DEATH FAN? WHAT ABOUT THE SKAVEN SCRAMBLERS? HAVE YOU EVER BOUGHT A TICKET TO SEE RAT MEN PLAYING BALL? OR THE WORST OFFENDERS TO THE SANCTITY OF NUFFLE'S HOLY BALLS, THE DWARVES. I MEAN I HAD SOME GOOD GAMES IN MY TIME AGAINST THE BEARDY BUGGERS, SOME

RIGHT GOOD FIGHTS, BUT LETS FACE FACTS, AND SAY, THOSE GAMES WERE ONLY ENTERTAINING BECAUSE THE DWARFS WERE PLAYING THE NUMBER ONE BLOOD BOWL SPECIES, ORCS. SO TO MY ORIGINAL POINT, WE (THE GOUGED EYE) CAN'T QUALIFY FOR THE PLAYOFFS ANYMORE, AND WE HAVE ONE GAME LEFT AGAINST THE WARHAMMERERS, WHICH IS A STUPID NAME TO BEGIN WITH, BUT MADE EVEN WORSE BY THE DWARF TACTIC OF 'STANDING THERE AND BEING FAT'. NOW DON'T GET ME WRONG, IT IS A VIABLE TACTIC FOR YOUR BLOCKERS AND LINEMEN, BUT NOT YOUR WHOLE ZOGGIN TEAM! IT Baffles ME WHY ANYBODY BOTHERS TO GO AND WATCH SUCH A SNOOZE FEST. YOU'RE BETTER OF SWITCHING YOUR CABAL-VISION OVER TO THE NEW SERIES OF MAGIC ITEM ROADSHOW HA HA HA HA HA. WELL, WE CAN CHEER ON THE ORCLAND RAIDERS AS THEY TAKE OF THE NAGGAROTH NIGHTWINGS. AT LEAST IT WILL BE WATCHABLE. IF ONLY TO SEE WHAT THE WITCH ELVES HAVE OR HAVEN'T DECIDED TO WEAR FOR THE MATCH. NOW WHERE'S MY BLACK AND YELLOW SPORTS JACKET HA HA HA HA HA.

(Just to point out, the Eye are going to be playing the Chaos Cup at the end of the season. I think the reason Gazbag has forgotten this is that he only managed to play 10 seconds of the final in the Eye's 2470 cup win- he did a great job fetching Bolg Stone-Mangle's flasks of Gatorcade, though!- Ed.)

THE EVIL GITZ

LADZ - DESPITE US WINNIN AGAINST DEM WANDERERERERERS I DUNT FINK WE IZ MAKIN DA PLAYOFFS - OUR REKORD IS 6 - 9 ... I MEEN ... HAHHAHA HAHHA ... U GET IT LADZ.

PLAYOFF PICTURE: WEEK 16

Westside Werewolves (9-5-1) vs Athelorn Avengers (9-6)

This is the big one. The NFC West divisional title depends upon the result of this game. Both the Elfheim Eagles and Dark Renegades have walkover victories in prospect, so the Werewolves find themselves with a 'win and your in' situation. However, a loss would almost certainly see them lose the top space, because, let's face it, even with high level cheating, the Hobgoblin team could never, ever beat a team like the Elfheim Eagles... could they?

Skaven Scramblers (10-5) vs Khain's Killers (12-3)

The celebrations across Skavenblight when the Scramblers took control of the NFC East title race are still ongoing, at the time of publication. However those celebrations may be short lived if Khain's Killers wounded pride sees them put in an inspired performance. As long as they match the Crescents result, the Scramblers will be crowned divisional champions.

Creeveland Crescents (9-5-1) vs Worlds Edge Wanderers (7-8)

The deflated Crescents will need to lift themselves, and do it quickly, the divisional title is still very much alive, but they need a stellar performance against the Worlds Edge Wanderers to stand a chance. Rumour has it that the Duke of Creeveland has dipped into his own fortune to personally hire a new magic coordinator for this match. It's surely going to be dramatic!

Bluebay Crammers (0-15) vs Dark Renegades (9-6)

The results not in doubt, but if the Renegades concede any touchdowns, they'll lose their tie breaker over the Eagles, which could have consequences, should the Werewolves lose their game.
